Background:

The Responsible Landlord Engagement Initiative (RLEI) is a program that helps communities stay safe and vibrant. They work with neighborhood leaders, law enforcement, and local government to hold property owners and tenants accountable for assuring that their properties contribute to the wellbeing of the community.

The RLEI represents a unique way of approaching neighborhood development through improving problem properties. RLEI rallies existing resources and finds creative ways to engage with private property owners, inviting them to join and wherever possible, lead the revitalization effort. In each case, the goal is to establish a sustainable solution for the problem property. Property owners, tenants, nearby residents, and other stakeholders work together to improve the physical and social conditions in the neighborhood for the long-term.

Over the past six years, the RLEI has worked alongside 120 neighborhood groups in San Jose to improve the safety and livability of their residents. The initiative has evolved from one case with 55 petitioners in 2011, to 132 cases with over 2150 petitioners by end of 2017.

Dramatic improvements include replacement of property managers, blight removal, and crime reduction. The type of problem property varies from detached single family residences to multifamily housing complexes with hundreds of units, and also commercial properties.
